

How to Give Public Testimony

to the State Vocational Rehabilitation Committee

The State Vocational Rehabilitation Committee (SVRC) meets four times a year throughout Alaska to gather testimony about the Division of Vocational Rehabilitation's (DVR) services. Meeting times are posted on the State of Alaska's online public notices at <http://aws.state.ak.us/OnlinePublicNotices/>. The testimony is used to measure the quality and effectiveness of the program in helping people with disabilities who want to find and keep a good job. Testimony is recorded in public records and a summary is reported to the Governor each year.

What to Talk About

- Begin by stating your name and where you are from.
- Talk about your personal experiences in receiving services from DVR or other agencies, how these have affected you in your life and how they helped or did not help you.
- You can also speak about other issues affecting people with disabilities that concern you, especially as it pertains to employment.
- Share whatever information you are comfortable sharing with the SVRC.

Four Ways to Give Your Public Testimony

1. In person at the meeting.
2. By phone during the meeting.
3. By email, at any time.
4. By letter, at any time.
